

Postage stamps authenticating the sender of a mail piece, and methods for use therewith

Abstract of Disclosure

A would-be purchaser of postage stamps is required to provide information indicative of his or her identity, for example by means of an identity code. The identity code is then imprinted upon the stamps and the stamps are then provided to the purchaser. The imprint may be a bar code, and the imprinted information may be cryptographically signed. The imprinted information may be printed in such as way as to be invisible to the naked eye.

09683426

Figures

For more information, please contact the author.